Experience

Began legal career in Utah where he worked in a partnership with his father in a general law practice handling matters including: contracts, property, wills & trusts, business, guardian ad litem, and family law for approximately five years.

In 2001 he moved to New York where he worked at Coblenz & Warner, which later became Hanly & Conroy and eventually Darger & Errante, LLP. He represented the interests of Federal Mogul and other clients as both national counsel and local counsel in asbestos defense litigation.

In 2002 he moved to Michigan where he continued to represent one of his New York friction clients on a local level. In 2008 he joined the Harvey Kruse law firm where he continues his practice of toxic tort defense. He has also branched out into other areas of law including civil litigation and insurance defense.
